

Free Range Eggs

Our hens are free ranged on our pastures from April through November, eating a buffet of grass, seeds and bugs, which are all supplemented with grain and minerals. During the winter, the hens are loose housed inside on a clean bedded pack and fed hay, grain and mineral. We do not use artificial lighting to keep our hens laying during the winter, therefore they follow the natural cycle of laying heavily during the spring and summer when the wild birds are laying their eggs, and slowing down during the fall and winter, when the days are short.

Turkeys

Our turkeys are raised on pasture during the summer and fall. There diet is basically the same as the chickens except that they eat a greater portion of grass and less of grain and mineral.

Pastured Meat Chicken

Our meat chickens are raised on a pasture in small bottomless pens and are moved to fresh grass daily. They eat grass, bugs, grain and mineral. We only raise meat chickens during the summer months when we can have them outside. Chicken is available from June when we harvest the first ones of the year until we run out. Next summer we hope to raise enough to last all winter.
